Secretary Malet-Prevost announced that the chief busihess of the morning had been the discussion of the state Department papers mentioned above, as well as the tenders of assistance which had poured in from every direction, showing a desire on the part of the people everywhere to offer evidence. Nothing had been yet presented by the Government of Great Britain or Venezuela, nor had any communication been received from those countries informing the Commission whether or not they would be represented by counsel. Regarding the visit of that of Mayor. Commission whether or not they would be rep-resented by counsel. Regarding the visit of pommissioners to Europe, Secretary Malet-Pre-vost said that it was premature to discuss that matter, as much study would be requisite here thoroughly to digest the case before any one would be in a position to make an effect-ive investigation. and adds:

The great mistake made by Lord Dunraven seems to have been that he did not make his all-important communication to the Regatta Committee in writing. He trusted to a verbal messace, and the verbal messace, as is often the case, apparently did not convey his full meaning to the messacher, and certainly did not do so to the committee, the language adopted by the committee toward Dunraven will be seen to be unduly severy when it is remembered that the charge was not made public by him until after it had been published by the committee to New-York. It is to be regretted, too, that the Committee of Inquiry was imable to take a wider view of its functions and judge the whole case on its merits.

The result of the investigation as it stands is, indeed, to acquit Mr. Iselfn and his friends of a charge which was brought against them, but it can hardly be said to have cleared up in a satisfactory manner the real matter at issue. That, indeed, as Lord Dunraven has contended all along, becam, impossible after the remeasurement on September 7, or after the custody of the yachts by the committee that night had been neglected.

Washington, Jan 31 .- The Senate, after wasting a month or six weeks of the session in taken on the House measure and all the amend ments offered to it. It is a foregone conclusion that the Jones substitute will pass although the margin in its favor is so close that the free-coinage managers wisely decided to postpone the test vote until their forces had been sensibly augmented by the admission of the Senators from the new State of Utah. The debate on the Bond bill occupied the Senate all day and evening, and although public interest was more than languid, the supply of oratory held out until a wearlsomely late hour.

Mr. Morrill, the venerable chairman of the Finance Committee, will close the discussion with a brief speech to-morrow morning.

THE PROCEEDINGS IN DETAIL.

The Senate was called to order by the Vice President at noon, at which time there were not over a dozen Senators present. As to-day's session through the parliamentary device of taking a recess instead of an adjournment yesterday, was a continuation of yesterday's, the usual formalities of prayer, reading the journal, presenting memorials, introducing bills and all the other morning business were dispensed with, and the Senate continued the consideration of the House bond

Mr. Bate (Dem., Tenn.) next addressed the Senate, decaring that he was unable to sustain either of the fiscal measures sent to the Senate by the House. They made a combination, he said, directly in conflict with the cpinions and wishes of the people, as he understood the draft of public opinion. The Finance Committee, however, had by its sliver substitute attempted to bring the country back to the constitutional currency of both gold and sliver, to restore the only legal-tender medium mentioned in the Constitution. It was an earnest and honest effort to restore the currency of the country that money which had been since the days of Abraham current in all trades and with all peoples.
